Parents can't do the job alone. Parents need the school to support them through, good food choice and information about students help.

- I agree with this position because the parents are not going to follow the kids to school just to make sure they eat right, so they need the schools help to keep track of what the kids eat.

It helps the school feel more connected with the support of both parents and schools.

* they can have someone who can check the kids should eat and what will happen if they don't eat healthy, and will help them eat right.

~~The~~ The school can show how much fat and sugar some products have to make the kids aware of it anymore, because they normally don't eat good food. They can also tell their dad that it's better to eat healthy than junk.

The school can also help parents to make sure their kids are eating right.
